LONDON, SATURDAY, June 17, 1732.

A Viſion, occaſion'd by the Ridotto al Freſco.

To TIM BIRCH, Gent.

SIR,

THE Ridotto al Freſco is ſo much a Novelty in this Part of Europe, that 'tis no Wonder it has been the Subject of all Converſation, or that it ſhould excite a general Curioſity for an Entertainment which ſo agreeably flatter'd the luxurious Taſte of the Age. 'Tis indeed a Diverſion capable of the greateſt Elegance, and higheſt Magnificence; it is of a Nature to employ the moſt refin'd Fancy, and the ſublimeſt Genius, and afford Satiety even to the moſt libertine Appetite of the moſt riotous Epicure: It delightfully mingles the moſt deſirable Pleaſures in one amiable Groupe, neither is it poſſible for Imagination to form one beautiful Idea within the Compaſs of Art or Nature, that is not of a Piece, or cannot be united with it. The Charms of Situation and Diſpoſition of Objects it heightens and improves; the Variety and Order of artificial Lights almoſt exceeds the Luſtre of the Day itſelf, and more effectually conceals every Defect the Sun would diſcover: The Uſe that may be made of them in deceiving the Eye is moſt wonderful, Painting appears the real Object it feigns, Diſtances are kept, and Shadows fall, juſt as Place and Subſtance would direct them. To theſe may be added the Softneſſes of Muſick, the Tranſport of Wine, and the unreſtrain'd Licence of the gayeſt Company, deſignedly met to indulge their wildeſt Inclinations even to Exceſs. This bewitching Aſſemblage of Provocatives firſt took its Riſe in Italy, where Sloth and Luxury had baniſh'd Bravery and Virtue, and from thence has tainted all the polite Nations of Europe. Nothing is more common than theſe Entertainments there, and, when their Nobility ſolemnize their Nuptials, or any other remarkable Feſtivity, the Evening is concluded with this inchanting Amuſement, and the habitual Reſtraint on their Manners at other Times is not the leaſt Motive to their Licence at this. I muſt own all theſe Conſiderations were powerful enough to induce me to make one of the gay Number at Spring-Gardens, and, if the Diſpoſition of Ornaments were not ſo grand, or ſo elegant as might have been wiſh'd, 'twas at leaſt a noble Eſſay, and the Decency, Order, and Goodneſs of the Collation was an abundant Amends. I will be free with you, Mr. Birch; my Heart was weak enough to be captivated with ſo new a Repreſentation of Pleaſure; I drank, I danc'd, and frolick'd away the Night, as if 'twas in a Paradiſe that knew no Fatigue, Wearineſs, or Pain: I forgot every Thought of Care and Anxiety: The World and I were for a few Hours altogether Strangers, and I little car'd to renew my Acquaintance. Every Body elſe was as happy as myſelf, and their Happineſs was an Increaſe of mine: Whether all was innocent or no, I will not venture to determine; the Soul is naturally fond of Pleaſure, and when the Paſſions are all rouz'd with ſo many Incentives to Enjoyment, 'tis not ſo eaſy to rein them in, or limit their Career. For my own Part I kept as ſtrict a Guard as I could, and, if not ſo good as I ought, I fully believe the Weakneſs of Human Nature will always be forgiven. Towards the Morning I retir'd to Bed with my Mind ſtill intent on the Night's Entertainment, inſomuch that even my Dreams continued the Scene in the following Manner; which, I preſume, you will think of as much Importance to the Publick as any Thing I have communicated already. Methought I was ſuddenly tranſported to a wide open Plain, in the Middle of which I diſcern'd a large and beautiful Incloſure, which conſiſted of an high and ſtrong Wall, diverſify'd at equal Diſtances with noble Pilaſters, and decorated a-top with a grand and elegant Cornice: In the Center of the Wall aroſe a magnificent Building after the Model of the antient Temples, with a bold Flight of Steps, which added a Stateline's to the Portico, and a Grace to the whole Fabrick. At the Entrance ſtood a Figure ſo odd and ſingularly made, that nothing but the Vagaries of a Dream could form any Thing like it: It was cover'd with Eyes and Ears like Virgil's Fame, and turn'd round with as quick a Motion as Fortune on her Wheel: Her Eyes were ever open like thoſe of Argus, and her Ears always as attentive as they; ſhe had a hundred Voices, and all were upon the Inquiry together; nothing eſcap'd her Notice; tho' ſhe was ever in Action, ſhe was never tir'd, and always began a new Adventure before ſhe had finiſh'd the laſt. I found myſelf inſenſibly drawn into her Company, and learn'd it was Curioſity herſelf, who made this her Stage to enquire after the Buſineſs of the World, and procure herſelf new Votaries. She took me by the Hand immediately like an old Acquaintance, offer'd to be my Guide, and procure my Admiſſion into the fair Manſion before me.——Immediately the Doors were open'd, and, while I paus'd a Moment with ſome Irreſolution to enter, the Porter, whoſe Name was Deſire, with the moſt perſuaſive Look, and moſt inſinuating Voice invited me in: He had the Wings and Face of an Angel, the Complexion of the God Cupid himſelf, but the Compoſure of his Countenance alter'd every Moment, and he ſeem'd as much influenc'd by Pain as Pleaſure. However I could not reſiſt his Importunity, but preſs'd in with an Eagerneſs I had never known till that Time, and the Gates behind me clos'd in a Moment.——I had now the moſt enchanting Proſpect to charm me that ever the Eye beheld; a long and ample Viſta, illuminated with ten thouſand Tapers open'd at once, and in the Middle of it all the Young and Vain of Mankind frolick'd along to a ſumptuous Building at the End which clos'd the View: This Path was only for thoſe who, becauſe of their high Birth, or affluent Fortunes, deſpis'd the Cenſure of the World, and dar'd perſue Pleaſure in the open Light without fearing or caring for the Conſequence; but, on either Side of this, was another Avenue cover'd cloſe with the Shadow of innumerable Boughs, and hardly diſtinguiſh'd with a ſingle Light to point out the Way: Thro' theſe the demure Hypocrite made the ſame Progreſs with the Gay and Loud, and made an equal Haſte to the ſame Goal: With this only Difference that they herded together, and form'd large Societies, whereas theſe crept in ſilent and alone, fearful of each other, and openly condemning what they ſecretly coveted. Thro' the firſt of theſe my buſy Guide conducted me, not without innumerable Impertinencies by the Way, inquiring, and informing perpetually, always curious, always applied and liſten'd to, and generally condemn'd, becauſe generally in the Wrong. The Point we had in View was the fair Structure before us, which was founded on a huge Rock, in the Middle of a ſpatious Lake; the Rock itſelf ſeem'd to be divided into a Number of arch'd Caverns at the Bottom, from the Mouths of which iſſued out continually large Streams of Water, which ſaluted the Ear with the moſt agreeable Murmur, and drove the Waves in ſucceſſive Circles to the Shore: Above roſe the Building of Rock-Work too, that it look'd to be of a Piece with the Place it ſtood on, and both ſeem'd natural to each other. The Steps that aſcended from the Water-Side wound round from the Landing inſenſibly, and in Proſpect ſhew'd ſeveral Streaks of the Rock with different Spaces of Steps between; the Portal conſiſted of a noble Row of double Columns of the ruſtick Kind, which ſupported a Pediment, on which was plac'd the Venus of Medicis, and in the Tablature underneath was writ, in Golden Capitals, THE PALACE OF PLEASURE. Two magnificent Pavillions conſtituted the Wings, and the Body of a Building ended in a Dome which compleated the Whole. Hither my Guide and I, with ten thouſand more, were convey'd in little gilded Gondolas, more magnificent than Cleopatra's: In this delightful Voyage my Soul was raviſh'd with all the Pleaſures that could enchant the Senſe or the Imagination: Every Gale from Shore waſted all the Odours of the Spring, and ſoften'd the Muſick of a thouſand Birds into one general Flow of Harmony; the Syrens warbled round us, and all the Kinds of muſical Inſtruments continued the Fugue, and contraſted the Graces of Muſick to each other: We landed in a general Chorus, which was caught by the Votaries, aſcending and deſcending, and died away in an Echo even more charming than the original Melody.

In the Middle of the Temple we found the Goddeſs herſelf, elevated on a pompous Throne, ſhaded with a coſtly Canopy above, and ſo ſituated to have the four Gates of the Temple open on every Side, and diſcovering, thro' a Length of Viſta, four ſtately Structures to terminate the Proſpect: The Sides of the Temple were decorated with lively Paintings, which expreſs'd the Power and Munificence of the Goddeſs: The Spaces between were enrich'd with Statues that almoſt breath'd; the moſt perfect Architecture and golden Foliage made up the reſt. Round about her a numberleſs Multitude of joyful Perſons worſhipp'd at her Shrine, hymn'd out her Praiſe, and begg'd a Continuance of her Favours: Peals of ſolemn Muſick modulated their Voices, and a Cloud of Incenſe perfum'd the Temple. On a Sign from the Goddeſs a profound Silence enſued, and ſhe herſelf ſpoke to her Worſhippers with ſuch ſuperior Sweetneſs, as the Maſter-Voice of a Concert warbles to his Audience, when Attention is the only Faculty of the Soul in Uſe, and all the Tones of Harmony ſubmit to him. "Come, my "Beloved, ſays ſhe, my Children! take Poſſeſſion of the "Joys I have prepar'd for you: Leave to the Sullen and "Severe their Honour, their Virtue, with the Pain and "Toil that attend them. Thoſe who follow me perſue "their own Pleaſure, and my Grants are what they deſire "themſelves. Does the Senſe of Beauty tranſport you? "The Idols of the World are at my Diſpoſal, and none of "my Worſhippers ſigh in vain. Do the Joys of Wine, "and the Tranſport of Mirth inſpire you? The Vintage is "mine, and it ſhall flow for you; Laughter and Pleaſantry "ſhall be your Companions, and the Roſe-Wreath never "fade on your Brow. Does the Luſt of Power, or the "Hope of Honour allure you? I am your Guide to both; "Ambition is my Servant, and Titles are diſpos'd at my "Command. Are ye fond of Riches? Is your Thirſt of "Gold to be ſatisfied only with Abundance? The Mines "of both the Indies are in my Hand, and I melt down the "Ore for whom I pleaſe. Ariſe! the different Paths are "before you! chuſe where you pleaſe, and what you wiſh "ſhall be your own. 'Tis Virtue only that frowns on her "Admirers; but mine are alway in my Smiles, and my "Smiles are a ſure Reward.

After he had ſtood upon the Pillory about three Minutes, in which Time he was moſt furiouſly pelted with large Stones, Pieces of Bottles, and Colliflower-Stalks, by which he was very much cut in his Face and Head; then a Chimney-Sweeper jump'd up to him, and pulled him down from the Pillory, and tore all his Cloaths off, leaving only his Stockings and Shoes on. FOREIGN NEWS.

Hague, June 6. N. S.

HAD the Court of Spain had nothing in View, but to puzzle all the Politicians in Europe, they could not poſſibly have ſucceeded better, than by making the Armament they have done: For it cannot be affirmed, that any particular Power is apprehenſive of the Danger as to itſelf; and yet all the Powers are alarmed, as if the Deſign were againſt all Europe. We hear of nothing but Encampments and Armaments; ſo that if the Year 1731 was called the Year of Treaties, 1732 may be termed the Year of Armaments; and it remains for us to ſee, whether it will not prove the Epocha of a new War. For our Parts, we do not know what to make of it. If the Time of the Spaniſh Fleet's Departure is uncertain, the Courſe it is to ſteer is much more ſo. It is ſaid here, that the Vice-Chancellor Count Sinzendorff has received ample Satisfaction in this Point from the Duke of Liria, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at the Court of Vienna, and that this has made the Imperial Court entirely eaſy in that Reſpect. Others will have it, (but they are Frenchmen) that the Spaniards will attack the Kingdom of Naples; in which Caſe the Emperor would have abundant Reaſon to exclaim againſt their Bona fide. However, there are Letters from Leghorn, by the Way of France, which mention that above Half the Kingdom of Sardinia has revolted, upon the Arrival of freſh Troops from Piedmont, with which the Inhabitants thought themſelves over-burdened before. If this News ſhould prove true, we need no longer queſtion whither the Spaniſh Fleet is bound, but muſt conclude that the Court of Seville is at the Bottom of that Revolt, and has made the grand Armament to ſupport it: But whether true or falſe, there are Letters from Madrid, which ſay they begin to open their Eyes there, and to perceive that their Expedition is not deſigned againſt Africa, as the Court has affected to make People believe. We hear that ſome Proteſtant Princes, ſhocked at the inhuman Execution of the Preacher Monſieur Durand at Montpelier, are inclined to uſe Reprizals, by hanging up all the Jeſuites, and caſtrating all the Monks that ſhall be found in their Dominions, under the Name of Miſſionaries. France has openly declared herſelf for the Houſe of Sultzbach, in the Succeſſion of Berg and Juliers: And we are told, his Britannick Majeſty will declare himſelf upon the ſame Subject, ſoon after his Arrival in his German Dominions.
